

ABSTRACT

[0079] A method for determining the spatial location of an object within a containing space, comprising iteratively sub-dividing the containing space into parent and child spaces and evaluating whether the object is completely contained within the space. An alternative method comprises iteratively sub-dividing the containing space until the object in question completely